Last Friday’s Riddle Answer
A teacher decides to give a pop quiz, but all of her students refuse to take the quiz, thinking that she will call it off. She can give only one of these students a detention for skipping the quiz. All of the students know each other’s names and if a student knows that they are getting a detention, they will take the quiz. How can she threaten her students with the single detention but ensure that they all take the quiz?

She can tell them that she will give the student who skips the quiz whose name comes first alphabetically a detention. This student won’t skip because they know they are getting a detention if they do. The next person alphabetically will then know that they will get a detention so they won’t skip either, and so on.
