URBAN STUDIES NEIGHBORHOODS

ALBANY PARK
Albany Park is a residential and commercial neighborhood on the northwest side of Chicago, bordered by the Chicago River. The neighborhood is one of the most diverse in the country and has one of the highest percentages of foreign-born residents in Chicago. Although the majority of those foreign-born residents are from Latin America, most from Mexico and Guatemala, substantial numbers are from Asia, Eastern Europe and the Middle East. Over 40 different languages are spoken in its public schools. The neighborhood has been the "Korea Town" of Chicago since the 1980s. Although many of the Asians in the neighborhood have been moving to the north suburbs in recent years, mostly due to gentrification, it retains some of its Korean flavor. The bustling commercial area includes a diverse array of restaurants, shops and businesses which reflect the multiculturalism of the neighborhood. Albany Park is also located close to Lincoln Square, which shares its independent shops and restaurants, and North Park and Northeastern Illinois Universities. Throughout the twentieth century, Albany Park has acted as a gateway community for aspiring middle-class ethnic groups and is an exciting place to live and learn about the dynamism of urban life for new residents.

UPTOWN
Uptown is located on the Northeast side of Chicago, within walking distance of Lake Michigan and is one of the most ethnically diverse neighborhoods in the nation. Over a third of its population was born outside the U.S. including countries in Africa, Asia, Latin America, Eastern Europe and Russia. If you listen carefully you can hear over 26 languages being spoken in the streets of Uptown. The neighborhood includes a substantial population of homeless and very poor, alongside working-class residents and a growing population of middle-class condo and homeowners, and a smattering of million dollar mansions. Uptown is a hub of community-based activism and culture, with a rich array of social service agencies, mutual aid associations, youth organizations, political organizations, community organizing groups, music and art. In recent years, the neighborhood has been caught in a tug-of-war between developers and wealthy new residents interested in increasing gentrification of the neighborhood and local organizations concerned with protecting the rights of the neighborhood’s existing poor and working-class residents. The neighborhood’s political ferment and rich diversity make it a dynamic and exciting setting for exploring urban life.
