Barb Behringer Geiser ’83 is an international development professional, currently working at the World Bank in the Office of the Vice President and Corporate Secretary. In her role there, she helps support clear and strong corporate decision-making from the Board of Executive Directors. Prior to this, she was an international economist in the International Affairs (IA) division of the U.S. Treasury Department for over twenty years. She held many different positions there, covering almost every region of the world and traveling to many. She negotiated on several U.S. teams, including those to provide U.S. contributions to the Multilateral Banks to provide grants and concessional loans to developing countries. She has served as advisor in the U.S. offices at the World Bank in Washington and the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) in Paris (yes, it was very nice…). She also served as IA’s Special Assistant for Personnel and Management to guide the group’s hiring, promotion, and retention policies.

When she’s not at work, she’s training for competition or her next promotion in Tae Kwon Do (currently a 2nd Degree Black Belt), playing or coaching volleyball with her husband, or hanging out with her 2 kids (22 and 18).

Before Treasury, Barb earned a Master’s in Public Policy from the Kennedy School of Government at Harvard University, after working for a year as an Economics Research Assistant at the Brookings Institution in Washington. And at Carleton, Barb majored in volleyball and minored in economics (at least that’s what her economics professors said at the time). Before Carleton, Barb left the far-away state of Wisconsin to become the first in her family to attend college.

Since graduating from Carleton in 1983, Barb has served in various alumni roles: interviewing local Maryland prospective students for Admissions; serving as 1983 class agent for the AAF and representing the 1980s on the AAF Board for several years; enjoying herself while supporting various Reunion planning events in terms of gifts and publicity; and serving on Carleton’s new Career Center Alumni Board.