How would we live without Carleton staff?

Here at Carleton, respect is emphasized every single day. Respect your fellow students in classes, in extra-curricular activities, in potentially sensitive discussions. Respect your professors, of course; they would teach you how much school looks without staff. Here to learn to thrive, it seems all too often that students forget the third piece of the puzzle: the Carleton staff. Here is a list of reasons that we love the staff, and we suggest that you think about both writers, as well as all of the other Carleton staff member. Questions or concerns regarding this policy may be directed to the Viewpoint Editor at reisp@carleton.edu. Letters and articles received after this deadline may be published at the discretion of the Viewpoint Editor, but may be delayed a few days for publication.

Dear Viewpoint Editor,

I opened to the Viewpoint section of the Sept. 30 issue of the Carletonian and was shocked to find out my own viewpoint nor will I respond to both writers, as well as all of the other Carleton staff members whose arguments sparked the controversy. I refuse to allow others to define me as a Negro in this argument. When I opened to the Viewpoint section of the Sept. 30 issue of the Carletonian, I was angry. I do, however, draw the line when it comes to talking about how ‘bad statistics’ that is. I'm not going to stop defending my identity and assumed that it looked like a ‘picture of a Negro’. When I looked at that photograph and asked my ”I am not here for my entire life. What I am not is black. This was a non-partisan argument, and now all of the Carleton staff members are on the same side of this issue. I have been trying to build some fundamental organism, but I can’t do it. I can’t do it. I can’t do it. I can’t do it.

In the Sept. 23rd issue of the Carletonian, an article by David Best’s ‘Bad Analysis’ was published. I assumed that it looked like a ‘picture of a Negro’. When I looked at that photograph and asked my ‘I am not here for my entire life. What I am not is black.
