John Tutino, Latin American History appears on the Carleton staff list in 1979-80, but he was hired by the History department of St. Olaf College. His Carleton office was always on fourth Willis. He always taught half at St. Olaf and half at Carleton College. It wasn't until 1980 when Ray Kea was hired, that African history was offered in a similar manner. Ray Kea was hired by Carleton College.

The Latin American/African History teaching trades with the St. Olaf College History Department were John Tutino/Jeane DeLaney, Latin American History (1977-2004), Ray Kea/Jamie Monson, African History (1980-2004).

The Latin Americanist was permanent members of the St. Olaf staff, but also attended Carleton history department meetings; the Africanist was a permanent member of the Carleton staff and also attended St. Olaf department meetings.

The faculty members had offices on both campuses, despite the different college schedules. St. Olaf used the semester system with a January month-long Interim program and Carleton used the trimester system).

The trade ended in 2003-2004.
