Introduction to Sociology

SOAN 111

This course introduces students to the study of society and what C. Wright Mills called the sociological imagination: a cognitive framework for locating within socio-historical contexts the events, relationships, and social phenomena that shape individual lives and collective experience. Sociology examines a wide range of topics using varied research methods. However, in the next ten weeks, we’ll narrow our focus to the conceptual foundations of sociology, its theoretical foundations, and select topics in the study of social inequality. Sociology implores us to embrace a specific type of critical thinking. The assigned readings are meant to challenge and encourage you to reexamine your own beliefs and ways of seeing and engaging the social world.

Student Learning Outcomes:

The Department of Sociology and Anthropology has specified six student learning outcomes (SLOs) that we want students to acquire before graduating. In this course, we focus on the following three:

• Learning how to connect information about historical and contemporary socio-cultural phenomena.

• Applying sociological theory to analyze socio-cultural phenomena.

• Drawing upon your understanding of historical and contemporary socio-cultural phenomena to engage the world.

Required Course Materials:

Three books are required for this course:

Additional reading is available electronically via the course Moodle. Always complete the assigned readings before class. Read the material closely, take effective notes, determine what is clear to you and what needs further clarification, and also consider how core ideas can be connected to other readings.
Course Requirements

Assignments

You will complete four course assignments in total, all of which have been designed to increase your comprehension of sociology. The first assignment, worth 7.5 points, asks you to write a short paper about your name. A second assignment, worth 20 points, involves an analysis of your own life from the perspective of the sociological imagination. The third assignment, worth 12.5 points, asks you to examine residential racial segregation in the United States and write a paper about your findings. The final assignment, worth 25 points, asks you to conduct a study of privilege in a public setting in Northfield and write a paper about your findings. More details about each of these assignments will be provided in class. Be advised that some assignments are due on non-class days. In these instances, a printed copy is required in my SOAN mailbox by 5 pm on the due date.

Tests

A 25 point midterm test will be held on October 16. The test will cover material discussed up to and including the October 14 class. Short-answer and essay questions will be used to assess your understanding of course material. The October 16 date is firm. Without formal documentation from a legitimate source (i.e., dean of students), no last-minute special accommodations will be provided for students who want to reschedule the test.

Participation

You participation, worth 10 points, will be evaluated according to mandatory class attendance, punctuality, and completion of the assigned readings so that your comments and questions have solid grounding and advance discussion. Participation also involves listening when others are speaking. Cell phones and other technology are not welcome in my classroom. You may use your personal computers to pull up class readings but in-class notes should be taken with paper and pen. If you have a personal circumstance that merits exception, please see me about it in advance. Students who meet the standards of class participation at only the most basic level will receive the “default” participation grade of 5 points. Students who miss more than three classes risk forfeiting their participation grade.

Assistive Services for Students

Accommodations for students with disabilities

Carleton College is committed to providing reasonable accommodations to students with disabilities. Students seeking accommodations should contact the Coordinator of Disability Services, Andy Christensen, at 222-4464 or anchrist@carleton.edu, to begin the process. Please note I will only respond to official notification of accommodations before modifying course requirements for students.

Technological resources for students with disabilities

The Assistive Technology program brings together academic and technological resources to complement student classroom and computing needs, particularly in support of students with physical or learning disabilities. Accessibility features include text-to-speech (Kurzweil) software, speech-to-text (Dragon) software, and audio recording Smartpens. For more information, contact aztechs@carleton.edu or visit go.carleton.edu/aztech.

Library

Ask a librarian for help with your research in this class. You can drop by the library’s Research/IT desk to ask any question you have, at any point in your process. Librarians help students find and evaluate articles, books, websites, statistics, data, and government documents; they can also show you how to cite your sources. For more information on hours and librarians, visit the Gould Library website at go.carleton.edu/library.

Time management, test preparation, and study skills

Residential Life Area Directors are trained to work with you to improve your time management and academic skills. Their goals are to heighten awareness of your personal strengths and skills and to offer different ways you can approach your academic work so you're more efficient and effective. Meetings are by appointment; you simply need to email one of them to arrange a visit. For more details and resources, visit the Academic Skills Coaching website.

Writing assistance

The Writing Center, located in 4th Libe, has peer writing consultants who can work with you during any stage of the writing process, from brainstorming to final proofreading. Hours and more information can be found on the writing center website. You can reserve specific times for conferences by using their online appointment system. Walk-ins are welcome although writers with appointments have priority.

Writing assistance for students whose first language is not English

If you are a second language writer and believe you might benefit from working individually with a writing consultant, email Renata Fitzpatrick, Multilingual Writing Coordinator, call her at x5998, or stop by her office in 420D 4th Libe. She can arrange once- or twice-a-week meetings between you and a specific writing consultant throughout the term.
